Transcriber's Office
FLOOR DEBATE

April 16, 2002 LB 989

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Yeah...

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: ...correct?

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: You'd wind up with, essentially, the same thing, I think. In our discussions people were talking about 21 people...or 19 people to conduct this study. We'll there's very little difference between 19 and 21. You're going to have to assign responsibility for the study to someone. You're going to have to probably have staffing requirements for the 19 people. If you want to have 19 people outside the Futures Center. You're going to wind up with those identical costs no matter what you do.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: And so we can identify what some of those costs may be, you would envision that there would be a project director or manager of some kind, who would, basically,...

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: Yeah.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: ...be the person who would be responsible. And that they would have a limited staff, not a full-time, ongoing staff that would exist after this project is complete?

SENATOR WICKERSHAM: That's correct. And I think that's consistent with the way the prior studies were conducted. Now, I know occasionally, we'll develop, for example, a task force, and we will have a chair of a committee or co chairs from two legislative committees, and they're in charge of the task force. I think this is a larger project than that, and we would, frankly, be unable to assign that to a committee chair, or even multiple committee chairs, and expect any kind of a good result.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: It would also probably be important to have a broad base of people that were not just legislative driven or have some orientation to the Legislature, that these would be people that would be a little broader base of people. That also might instill some public confidence in how the study was done. I'm looking towards giving, maybe, the fiscal staff, some direction as to how...
